

Activities to Spur Active Learning in your Nursing Program

One big player in increasing student engagement within a concept-based classroom is utilizing active learning strategies. Check out some of our favorites active learning activities that you can implement within your own nursing program!

Pre-Class Assignments

Prior to class, require students to research key terms, related diagnostic tests, patient assessments, required medications or drug classes, and exemplars related to the concept.

Unfolding Case Studies

Use a PowerPoint presentation that includes visual cues on the patient picture, lab tables, and patient quotes to encourage discussion.

NCLEX Practice Questions

Have students answer questions individually, followed by a larger class debate on correct and incorrect answers.

Role Play

Have students act as patients, nurses, family members, technicians, etc. in a skit presentation that also reveals the importance of good and poor therapeutic communication.

Concept Maps

Create them to cover content acquisition, student assessment, or knowledge application. Students can then photograph and use later as exam study tools.

Simulation Activities

Allow students to practice more hands-on interventions and procedures, such as a code blue scenario. Faculty can participate in a smaller role—as a technician—but should encourage students to summon their critical thinking skills.

Brain Drain

A rapid-fire exercise, where students shout out 5-10 concept-related terms that the instructor lists on a white board. As the class finishes discussing each term, the instructor erases each, enhancing students' recall capabilities.

Mystery/Patient/Drug in a Box

Groups select a box, scattered about the classroom, in which the instructor has placed items and pictures related to the day's concept. They use the items to present to the class—in 5-10 minutes—a specific patient story, after which the class brainstorms on how a nurse might treat their hypothetical patient.

Gallery Walk

Teachers scatter pictures and artifacts derived from the day's concept around the classroom. Small groups of students wander throughout the room identifying items and their relevance to the concept in terms of interventions, patients, and procedures.

Compare & Contrast

Faculty create two scenarios of patients with the same symptoms and conditions, and students must discuss how they would treat—including medication interventions—the patients differently or similarly.

What If?

Pose various 'what if' questions to individuals or groups on a clinical situation. For example, in a discussion of the concept of Perfusion, questions could include: what if a patient is cold and blue? Complaints of dizziness? Develops crackles in the lungs? Etc.
