Preventing non-communicable diseases using pricing policies Shu Wen Ng,Thomas J. Hoerger,Rachel Nugent,2021-05-27 Preventing non communicable diseases NCDs in an effective and sustainable way will require forward looking policy solutions that can address multiple objectives This was true pre COVID 19 and is even more true now There are already examples from across the globe and within the United States that show how these may be possible Although there are still many unknowns around how the design targeting level sequencing integration and implementation of fiscal policies together can maximize their NCD prevention potential there is already clear evidence that health taxes and particularly sugar sweetened beverage SSB taxes are cost effective Nonetheless policies alone may not succeed Political will to prioritize well being protections against industry interference and public buy in are necessary If those elements align pricing policies that consider the context in question can be designed and implemented to achieve several goals around reducing consumption of unhealthy SSBs and foods narrowing existing nutritional and health disparities encouraging economic and social development The US and its local and state jurisdictions should consider these pricing policy issues and their contexts carefully in collaboration with community partners and researchers to design multi duty actions and to be prepared for future windows of opportunities to open for policy passage and implementation
