

Market History: Relationships with the Environment In the 1970s, environmentalists began to argue that the market was failing to take environmental costs into account. This argument was based on the observation that environmental costs were not reflected in the prices of goods and services. This led to a call for environmental regulation and taxation, and eventually to the creation of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) in 1970. The EPA was charged with protecting human health and the environment from the effects of pollution and other forms of environmental degradation. The agency has since become one of the most powerful environmental regulators in the world, with a budget of over $10 billion and a staff of over 17,000.
