What Is a Galaxy?

Read the text and answer the questions.

A galaxy is a massive system composed of stars, stellar remnants, interstellar gas, dust, and dark matter all bound together by gravity. Galaxies exist in various shapes and sizes, with the most common being spiral, elliptical, and irregular. Galaxies range from small, isolated systems to clusters of billions of galaxies.

The Milky Way is the galaxy that contains our solar system and is classified as a barred spiral galaxy. It is estimated to have over 100 billion stars and spans about 100,000 light-years in diameter. Galaxies are also composed of gas and dust, which are constantly interacting with each other through gravitational forces. These interactions can lead to phenomena such as galaxy mergers, where two or more galaxies collide and combine to form a larger galaxy.

Scientists are crucial in understanding the universe's structure and evolution. They are the building blocks of the universe, and studying them can provide insights into the formation of stars and planetary systems. Observing distant galaxies allows astronomers to look back in time and see how galaxies have evolved over billions of years. In fact, as the Hubble Space Telescope has contributed to our understanding of galaxies.

The study of galaxies has advanced significantly with the development of powerful telescopes and space exploration. Astronomers use the Hubble Space Telescope to observe distant galaxies and study their structure and evolution. They also use space-based observatories to study the universe's structure and evolution. Galaxies are the building blocks of the universe, and studying them can provide insights into the formation of stars and planetary systems.

Understanding galaxies not only enhances our knowledge of the universe but also helps us understand our place in it. Each galaxy is a vast and dynamic system, filled with billions of stars and planets. Studying galaxies can help us understand the universe's structure and evolution.
