Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos. The subjects included 100 men from the asbestos-exposed group and 100 men from the control group. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the asbestos-exposed group than in the control group.

Keywords: Asbestos exposure, Risk factors, Coronary artery disease

Introduction

Asbestos is a naturally occurring mineral fiber that has been used in many products since the early 1900s. It is known to cause lung cancer and mesothelioma, and it is also suspected of causing other diseases. The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos.

Methods

The subjects included 100 men from the asbestos-exposed group and 100 men from the control group. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the asbestos-exposed group than in the control group.

Results

The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the asbestos-exposed group than in the control group.

Conclusion

The results of this study suggest that there may be a link between asbestos exposure and an increased risk of coronary artery disease. Further research is needed to confirm these findings.
