Relational Aspects of Parental Involvement to Support Educational Outcomes William Jeynes, 2022-07-18 Offering contributions from international leaders in the field this volume builds on empirically informed meta analyses to foreground relationship based aspects of parental involvement in children's education and learning Chapters explore how factors including parent child communication cultural and parental expectations as well as communication with a child's teacher and school can impact educational outcomes By focusing on relationships between parents teachers and students chapter authors offer a nuanced picture of parental involvement in children's education and learning. Considering variation across countries, educational and non-educational contexts and challenges posed by parental absence and home schooling, the book offers key insights into how parents, schools, communities and educators can best support future generations. Using multiple forms of research from the relational perspective, this volume will be of interest to students, scholars and researchers with an interest in educational psychology as well as child development.

School Systems, Parent Behavior, and Academic Achievement Emma Sorbring, Jennifer E. Lansford, 2019-09-17. This volume takes an international and multidisciplinary approach to understanding students' academic achievement. It does so by integrating educational literature with developmental psychology and family studies perspectives. Each of the nine chapters focuses on a particular country: China, Colombia, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, the Philippines, Sweden, Thailand, or the United States. It describes the country as a cultural context, examines the current school system and parenting in light of the school system, and provides empirical evidence from that country regarding links between parenting and students' academic achievement. The book highlights similarities and differences in education and parenting across these nine countries, all varying widely in socioeconomic and cultural factors that affect schools and families. The volume contributes to greater understanding of links between parenting and academic performance in different cultural groups. It sheds light on how school systems and parenting are embedded in larger cultural settings that have implications for students' educational experiences and academic achievement. As two of the most important contexts in which children and adolescents spend time, understanding how schools and families jointly contribute to academic achievement holds promise for advancing the international agenda of promoting quality education for all.

The Effect of Parent Involvement on Student Achievement Onene G. Saloka, 2009. The rationale of this literature review is to demonstrate a relationship between parent involvement and student academic success. Research reviewed all confirms positive correlation and rejects the opposite. The key elements include parent involvement, responsibility and participation in their children's education, collaboration between teacher, parent, student and school, home learning environment support. Parental involvement is a mixture of dedication and active participation on the part of the parent to the school and to the student. There are many problems concerned with involvement. Many schools simply do not know how to deal with the nontraditional family and the areas of concern that it represents. The number of solutions that can be used to improve parental involvement are extensive. The most important of these, however, is for the school to be totally devoted. When these solutions are implemented, the effects are great, especially for the student.

leaf 4 Parental Involvement and Pupils' Academic Achievement Yuko Oso Willis, Hamud Abdillahi Mukhtar, 2015-07-15. Parental involvement is participation of parents in regular 2-way meaningful communication about the child's academic learning and other school activities. It is believed that if pupils are to maximize their potential from schooling, then parental support is necessary. Global trend is to give parents increased role in governing schools. In Somaliland, since the introduction of FPE in 2011, parents have assumed a greater role in the running of schools. However, the influence of parental involvement on pupils' academic achievement had not been investigated. This study investigated the influence of parental involvement on academic achievement of pupils in public primary schools in Borama District using a survey of 291 pupils from 19 public primary schools in Borama District. Home teaching F 1 291 3 87 p 024, parenting F 1 291 3 87 p 042, parental communication F 1 291 4 60 p 036, and collaborating F 1 291 5 46 p 020 had significant influence on the academic achievement of pupils in public primary schools in Borama District. The study concluded that parental involvement has a significant influence on academic achievement of the pupils.

Parent Involvement in Education Melanie R. Scott Stein, Ron Thorkildsen, 1999. This comprehensive review of parent involvement examines more than 200 studies to identify what research says about attitudes toward parent involvement, how parent involvement is practiced, and how parent involvement affects student achievement. The review also identifies research-based applications educators can use to implement effective parent involvement practices, discusses how schools can involve special populations of parents, and describes common barriers to involving parents and what schools can do to remove those barriers. Chapter 1 gives a brief history of parent involvement and contends that educators need to know if research provides evidence that parent involvement is an effective educational practice. Chapter 2 presents research indicating that educators, parents, and children agree that parent involvement is important but do not agree on specific aspects of parent involvement. Chapter 3 notes that there is a moderate positive relationship between parent involvement and student achievement, and that parents' expectations of their children's academic achievement have the strongest positive relationship with children's actual achievement level, a robust finding with implications for school-parent relationships. Chapter 4 describes characteristics of strong parent involvement programs, identifies major obstacles to such programs, and discusses the administrator's role in making changes in parent involvement practices. Chapter 5 discusses several ways teachers can provide mechanisms for parent involvement both at school and at home. Chapter 6 examines parent involvement in the context of special populations, barriers to effective parent involvement, cautions about practicing parent involvement, promises for parent involvement, and guidelines for practicing parent involvement. Contains 207 references. KB

The Effects of Parent Involvement on Children's Achievement Suzanne Ziegler, 1987. Aspects of communication between home and school are discussed in four chapters. Introductory remarks point out two very important messages in the research on the effects of parental involvement. The first is that the gap between working-class and middle-class children in school achievement is explained in substantial part by certain differing patterns of child-parent and parent-school interaction. A second and even more important message is that school personnel can intervene positively and efficiently to teach most parents to be as effective as some parents already are. Chapter I focuses on parental involvement with children at home at the preschool, primary, junior intermediate, and senior levels. Chapter II concerns parental involvement at school. Chapter III discusses the whys and hows of connecting parents and schools. Chapter IV deals with overcoming barriers and getting commitment in parent teacher partnerships A bibliography is included RH Parental Involvement at School and Student Academic Success in Secondary Education Diane Lynn Barber,1997
