The New Deal

The New Deal was a series of programs and policies implemented in the United States during the 1930s in response to the Great Depression. Initiated by Franklin D. Roosevelt, the New Deal aimed to provide relief for the unemployed, recover the economy, and reform the financial system to prevent future depressions.

The New Deal consisted of four main phases: the First New Deal (1933-1936) and the Second New Deal (1937-1940). The First New Deal focused on immediate relief and economic recovery through emergency legislation, such as the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) and the Public Works Administration (PWA), which provided jobs and improved infrastructure.

The Second Wave had organized more progressive groups, including the Good Society Act, which established a safety net for the elderly and unemployed. The phase also strengthened workers' rights through the National Labor Relations Act, which supported unionization.

The New Deal had a significant impact on American society, including the relationship between the government and the economy. It expanded the role of the federal government in economic affairs and had the government run many social welfare programs.

Cross of the Year that argued that it would prove disastrous to the mining and other the early miners, especially to the miners for recovery and provided and amounted to millions of dollars.
