then portioning it up to reuse and meals for later. If you've ever kept up with your leftovers from dinner to take with you for lunch the next day, you've learned that meal prepping refers to preparing 3-7 days worth of food at a time. This kind of time management is great for lunches for the week, but instead of keeping up with lunch, you can use this same technique for breakfast, lunch, dinner, and snacks. Meal prepping involves preparing food in advance to reduce waste and reduce time spent cooking outside of your meal plan. Whether you plan a day or a budget, when you're not rushed, you have more time to prepare meals without having to do it every day. Not for everyone. It is good for those who value convenience and prepare more than you. With meal prepping, you get to eat the same thing for a few days in a row, so if you don't like leftovers or get bored with the same meal prepping night after night, having a variety of meals is important. The budget is more expensive than buying individual meals every night, but it's generally seen as a meal replacement for the individual. It's also good for maximizing your time and budget is more expensive than buying individual meals every night, but it's generally seen as a meal replacement for the individual.
