Moving Targets Moving Targets:

Moving Targets Sean Flannery,1992      Cooperative search for moving targets with the ability to perceive and evade using multiple UAVs Ziyi Wang,Wencheng Zou,Sheng Li,2023-10-28 This paper focuses on the problem of regional cooperative search using multiple unmanned aerial vehicles UAVs for targets that have the ability to perceive and evade When UAVs search for moving targets in a mission area the targets can perceive the positions and flight direction of UAVs within certain limits and take corresponding evasive actions which makes the search more challenging than traditional search problems To address this problem we first define a detailed motion model for such targets and design various search information maps and their update methods to describe the environmental information based on the prediction of moving targets and the search results of UAVs We then establish a multi UAV search path planning optimization model based on the model predictive control which includes various newly designed objective functions of search benefits and costs We propose a priority encoded improved genetic algorithm with a fine adjustment mechanism to solve this model The simulation results show that the proposed method can effectively improve the cooperative search efficiency and more targets can be found at a much faster rate compared to traditional search methods      Optimal Search for Moving Targets Lawrence D. Stone,Johannes O. Royset,Alan R. Washburn,2016-04-06 This book begins with a review of basic results in optimal search for a stationary target It then develops the theory of optimal search for a moving target providing algorithms for computing optimal plans and examples of their use Next it develops methods for computing optimal search plans involving multiple targets and multiple searchers with realistic operational constraints on search movement These results assume that the target does not react to the search In the final chapter there is a brief overview of mostly military problems where the target tries to avoid being found as well as rescue or rendezvous problems where the target and the searcher cooperate Larry Stone wrote his definitive book Theory of Optimal Search in 1975 dealing almost exclusively with the stationary target search problem Since then the theory has advanced to encompass search for targets that move even as the search proceeds and computers have developed sufficient capability to employ the improved theory In this book Stone joins Royset and Washburn to document and explain this expanded theory of search The problem of how to search for moving targets arises every day in military rescue law enforcement and border patrol operations      Moving Targets B C/Px6 Helen Birch,1993-01-28 MOVING TARGETS. ,2006      Optimal Search for Moving Targets Lawrence D. Stone,Johannes O. Royset,Alan R. Washburn,2016-04-14 This book begins with a review of basic results in optimal search for a stationary target It then develops the theory of optimal search for a moving target providing algorithms for computing optimal plans and examples of their use Next it develops methods for computing optimal search plans involving multiple targets and multiple searchers with realistic operational constraints on search movement These results assume that the target does not react to the search In the final chapter there is a brief overview of mostly military problems where the target tries to avoid being found as well as rescue or rendezvous problems where the target and the searcher cooperate Larry Stone wrote his definitive book Theory of Optimal Search in 1975 dealing almost exclusively with the stationary target search problem Since then the theory has advanced to encompass search for targets that move even as the search proceeds and computers have developed sufficient capability to employ the improved theory In this book Stone joins Royset and Washburn to document and explain this expanded theory of search The problem of how to search for moving targets arises every day in military rescue law enforcement and border patrol operations Predetermined Standard Position Time Values for Continuous Moving Targets Floyd Glenn Miller, 1961 Detection of Low-Contrast Moving Targets John P. Mazz, Regina W. Kistner, William T. Pibil, ARMY MATERIEL SYSTEMS ANALYSIS ACTIVITY ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND MD., 2000 The U S Army Materiel Systems Analysis Activity USAMSAA designed a perception experiment to assess the influence of target angular velocity on the detectability of low to moderate contrast targets The Moving Target Experiment It MTE II was designed to be representative of search with the unaided eye Target angular velocity range contrast and background were varied Targets with near equal contrast at identical range and angular velocity yielded widely different probabilities of detection However within a specific background region contrast had a significant impact This localized impact of target contrast indicates that further improvements in search and target acquisition modeling requires the evaluation of scene content's impact on target detection i.e. what about the scene leads an observer to the vicinity of the target For low contrast targets scene content has even greater impact on detection The U S Army's standard methodology for representing search and target acquisition in combat models is the ACQUIRE model Current implementations of ACQUIRE utilize the two thirds rule to represent the detection of all moving targets regardless of angular velocity The n50 for the detection of moving targets is simply 2/3 of the n50 used to represent the detection of stationary targets Results of the MTE II and other experiments indicate that the appropriate ratio of moving to stationary n50 decreases as a function of angular velocity A ratio of 2/3 equates to an angular velocity of 1 milli radian/sec and a ratio of 1/3 equates to an angular velocity of 3/3 milli radians/sec The Moving Target Ross Macdonald, 1951 Infantry, 1987-07 Technological Change and Opportunities for Development as a Moving Target Carlota Perez, 1999 Moving Targets Scott Douglas Sagan, 1990-02-14 Shows how targeting decisions have reflected the judgments of various American administrations on what will and won't deter a nuclear attack A Study of Methods for Engaging Moving Targets, 1982 This research focused on two methods for engaging moving targets tracking and trapping Our interests in determining the conditions under which either method would prove superior It was hypothesized that a shooter's ability as well as the speed and range of the target may affect the outcome All testing was accomplished on a M16A1 rifle marksmanship simulator which permitted the manipulation of the target's speed velocity or duration and range apparent size Following a 24 target pretest the 24 subjects were evenly divided into high and low ability groups All subjects then fired two additional 24 target sequences being instructed to track and then trap targets or vice versa

Following testing subjects were required to indicate their preference for either tracking or trapping Neither method appears optimally suited for all individuals or for all targets Trapping proved superior for low ability subjects and for the farthest smallest target moving at the slowest observed speed Tracking proved superior for high ability subjects and for the closest largest target moving at the fastest observed speed Subjects generally preferred to use the method producing better results
