MTS LAB: Relationships and Biodiversity BioBlitz Overview

Relationships

Relationships between or within species support the success of ecosystems. Relationships are interconnected because they have many important benefits and services. Citizen scientists can provide and protect biodiversity. Biodiversity increases species' ability to naturally survive and thus provides greater resilience, making healthy ecosystems. Citizen scientists can help protect biodiversity.

Relationships that are closely linked to healthy ecosystems are those that help to protect them. Interactions between species in an ecosystem are often symbiotic. Citizen scientists can help to protect these interactions by monitoring ecosystems. Monitoring means to observe and measure the environment over time.

- protecting relationships and resilience for the environment and its species because interconnectedness are often interconnected ecosystems, therefore ecosystems
- use these relationships for citizen science projects to protect healthy ecosystems and environments for long-term environmental health
