Excess Capacity and Difficulty of Exit Sumio Saruyama, Peng Xu, 2021-09-16 This book provides cases and analyses of causes and consequences of difficulty in downsizing and exiting in the electronics industry during the two lost decades in Japan. Because of excess capacity in the industry, many electronics companies have been required for downsizing and exit since the 1990s. Exploiting corporate financial and segment datasets, it shows empirical evidence of misallocation of internal funds to zombie segments, intra-firm businesses suffering losses consecutively. The topics addressed in the book include the failure of Japanese corporate internal control systems, the lack of capital market pressure, employment protection, and misallocation of internal funds to businesses with few prospects. The last two decades indicate that the Japanese corporate governance systems have failed to resolve problems of excess capacity as did US systems in the 1980s. Zombie lending is no more than one phase of the difficulty of downsizing and exit in response to excess capacity in the banking sector. Supported by both data analyses and rich anecdotal evidence, this book is highly recommended to readers who seek a convincing and comprehensive explanation of Japan's two lost decades from the points of view of difficulty in downsizing and exit. The authors' analyses have implications not only for accelerating downsizing and exit in corporate Japan but also for the world economy.

A New Generation of Organic Light-Emitting Materials and Devices Shi-Jian Su, Lian Duan, Hisahiro Sasabe, 2019-11-27 Since the invention of the first efficient organic light-emitting diodes (OLEDs) by C. T. Tang and S. VanSlyke, OLEDs have attracted close interest as a promising candidate for next-generation full-color displays and future solid-state lighting sources because of a number of advantages like high brightness and contrast, high luminous efficiency, fast response time, wide viewing angle, low power consumption, and light weight. The recombination of holes and electrons under electrical excitation typically generates 25% singlet excitons and 75% triplet excitons. For traditional fluorescent OLEDs, only 25% singlet excitons can be utilized to emit light, while the other 75% triplet excitons are generally wasted through nonradiative transition. By adopting noble metal phosphorescent complexes, an internal quantum efficiency (IQE) of 100% could be achieved by utilizing both the 25% singlet excitons and 75% triplet excitons. However, these phosphors usually contain nonrenewable and high-cost iridium or platinum noble metals. Most recently, unity IQE has been readily achieved through noble metal-free purely organic emitters such as thermally activated delayed fluorescence (TADF) emitters, hybridized local and charge transfer (HLCT) hot exciton emitters, binary or ternary mixed donor-acceptor exciplex emitters, and neutral p-radical emitters, etc. In addition, the combination of conventional p-type hole transport and n-type electron transport materials in an appropriate device structure can also provide an uncommon efficiency. Both strategies are essential and attractive for high performance and low-cost full-color displays and white OLED applications. This Research Topic mainly focuses on this new generation of organic light-emitting materials and devices, including design, synthesis, and characterization of light-emitting organic molecules with tunable excited states and their structural, electrical, and photophysical properties. Contributions relating to carrier transporting materials and corresponding device engineering are also included Two mini reviews and thirteen original research articles by recognized academic experts in their respective fields are collected in this Research Topic which will offer a broad perspective of noble metal free organic light emitters including conventional fluorescent emitters TADF emitters HLCT emitters exciplex emitters aggregation induced emission AIE luminogens and their corresponding devices We believe this eBook should attract the attention of multidisciplinary researchers in the fields of materials science organic synthesis and electronic device engineering especially for those engaged in OLED related areas
