

Dear college admissions officer,

I am writing to recommend to you my daughter, Emily, for admission into your college. I know this is somewhat extraordinary, to hear from a mother, but Emily is no ordinary applicant and I wanted to bring that to your attention. I know all parents think that their child is special, but believe me: I'm not wrong about this, and I know the other letters you receive about her will tell you the same. But you see, I've known her longer and loved her more and I've seen things the rest of them haven't — things I'd like to draw to your attention.

Going back nearly to when she was born, I can tell you that Emily has slept through the night since she was two weeks old. This, to me, shows that she is not only considerate of others (believe me — I was grateful — not to mention the envy of the other new moms), but has a finely-tuned appreciation for scheduling and structure. More seriously, I think Emily has always been at home in her own skin — a rare thing among teenage girls these days — and comfortable with whom she is becoming.

She has also always been kind. We knew this early on, too, when her pre-K teacher called us aside to tell us what she had been doing for a classmate. One of the little girls in class had a withered arm, she told us, and every day, during circle time, when the kids would join hands to sing, the other children refused to hold the small, deformed hand on her withered arm. Noticing this, Emily began making sure she was on that side every day and on every occasion afterward that required hand-holding. She would grab her classmate's hand without hesitation, without fanfare. The girls became friends and soon, the other children were more comfortable around her.

In that same quiet way, Emily has been holding the hands of all her friends over the years. She is loyal and true, and in her own quiet way she is a leader. She isn't loud, she isn't a talker; she leads by example, through her actions. And because she has such a strong sense of ethics, those who follow her are in good hands.

Of course, no child is perfect, and Emily is no exception.

She will be harder on herself than you could ever be. There will be sleepless nights, anxious calls home and short-tempered days, as she pressures herself to be better, to get things right. She will be demanding of herself and others, both on the field and in the classroom. And she will not suffer fools gladly.

She will struggle to deal with seeing fellow students drink — especially athletes — and this will not make her popular. She may judge a little too harshly, although already she is trying to reconcile her friends' need to experiment with her need to abstain. She's seen too much in her young life to take drug and alcohol use lightly, but she will need to temper her response to the realities of college life. I have no doubt that time will teach her this lesson.

There are, in fact, many lessons she has yet to learn and if you are both lucky, she will learn some of them at your college. No student will work harder or be more diligent in her pursuit to succeed, I assure you, and she will be a credit to your name. On the day that you hand her her diploma, some four and a half years from now, you will be sorry to see her go but proud of all that she has accomplished.

Just as her father and I are today.
