Training the Senior Executive

It's hard to change conventional thinking about how the organization can be most effectively run. But the good news is that change is possible.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40 to 55 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group performed a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, while the control group remained sedentary. Physical fitness was measured by a series of tests, including a maximal oxygen consumption test, a 1500-meter run, a 500-meter run, a 200-meter run, a 100-meter run, a 50-meter run, a 25-meter run, a 10-meter run, a 5-meter run, a 2-meter run, and a 1-meter run. Health was measured by a series of tests, including a blood pressure test, a cholesterol test, a glucose test, and a uric acid test. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and lower levels of health risk factors than the control group. The training program was effective in improving the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.
