couple of years it has become increasingly apparent that the big players in the tech industry are difficult to value due to a variety of reasons. The main reason is that there seem to be different valuation metrics in the tech market than in other markets. You could see it as looking at the Return on Data (RoD) instead of the more traditional Return on Investment (RoI). The value of data is hard to determine, which leads to possibly arbitrary valuations of the data-driven companies. This whitepaper will value Spotify, Uber, and Lyft based on our developed RoD metrics and will try to explain what drives the value of data. The whitepaper contains two parts: the first part discusses Spotify's value in the first months of its IPO. The second part contains a post scriptum where Spotify's performance a year later is discussed, as well as the recent IPOs of Uber and Lyft.
