However, because the data were gathered by telephone, no objective measure of physical exertion was available. In addition, the physical exertion of the participants was not measured. Therefore, it is not possible to determine whether the physical exertion of the participants was similar to that of the participants in the study by Pihl et al. (1998). However, the physical exertion of the participants in the present study was probably similar to that of the participants in the study by Pihl et al. (1998) because the participants in the present study were asked to perform the same physical exertion as the participants in the study by Pihl et al. (1998).
