updated were also tested but identified only a small proportion of new evidence Relative performance of the test searches was consistent regardless of whether the intervention was a drug device or procedure All searches showed variability across clinical areas but Related Articles RCT showed the most consistency The pairing of Related Article RCT and Clinical Query gave excellent recall of new relevant material Conclusions Meta analysts can identify new evidence through a simple structured Boolean search paired with a related articles protocol By building on the evidence base formed in the original review related article searching may replace time consuming non database methods necessary in conducting original reviews
