Assessment of the Capacity, Incentives, and Performance of Agricultural Extension Agents in Western Democratic Republic of Congo Catherine Ragasa, John Ulimwengu, Josee Randriamamonjy, Thaddee Badibanga, 2013-08-19 Agricultural extension is critical for agricultural growth and food security but making the extension system effective demand driven and responsive to the needs of a diverse set of producers remains a challenge As part of the institutional reforms in the Democratic Republic of Congo DRC the extension system is being reviewed to identify strategies and practical actions to transform the system to better respond to the knowledge needs in a rapidly changing agriculture and food sector This paper provides an in depth review of the agricultural extension system of DRC including an analysis of its policies and legal framework organization and management links to critical institutions and capacity and incentive of different actors in the system This review involved document analyses interviews with key informants and surveys of 107 extension organizations and 162 extension agents in 156 randomly selected villages in western DRC This review suggests serious funding constraints human resource management problems no linkage and coordination within the extension system and with research and education systems and a majority of underserved communities and farmers This review also highlights a good opportunity given the huge human resources more than 11 000 agents deployed into the sectors and territories as part of the Ministry s agricultural inspection system However their mandate is not clear and they currently focus on data collection census and checking what farmers do and limited in extension and advisory work This review highlights the urgent need for human resource or civil service reform public sector commitment and funding infrastructure rebuilding and skills upgrading in extension education and training and research organizations and a unified policy or strategy with clear vision mandate targets and performance based incentive system Marketizing Education and Health in Developing Countries Christopher Colclough, 1997 This book draws on evidence from a large number of developing countries to assess the impact of market reforms on the provision of education and health services The contributors show that approaches that seek merely to pass more of their costs to consumers perform less well than is often claimed and that improved cost effectiveness of health and education systems requires far more than changes in the sources and mechanisms of obtaining finance The Political Economy of Economic Reform in the Pacific Ron Duncan, 2011-07-01 Over the last several years Vanuatu has become one of the fastest growing economies in the Pacific region driven primarily by tourism construction and aid inflows The achievement of strong economic growth has also occurred on the back of improved economic policy effective fiscal management and improved environment for private sector development While recent gains have been impressive more remains to be done to sustain growth and ensure the benefits are distributed throughout the nation The Government is now on a sound financial footing and is well placed to address key development issues The report discusses options for responding to these needs with a view to helping guide public policy formulation in Vanuatu Uganda Journal of
