

How to Explain Family Science to Anyone

Create Your Family Science Elevator Pitch

When someone asks you "What is Family Science?" how can you answer effectively? Use our elevator pitch — the steps of progressively introducing a concept during a short elevator ride.

Follow These Steps:

Definition 1: Give a basic description of Family Science. One definition is good to share. Some interesting facts or a surprising example helps.

Definition 2: In 1-2 sentences, expand on how Family Science connects concepts and important

Definition 3: Give a real-life example of how Family Science understanding would be helpful in practice. Give your words to something your audience cares about.

Definition 4: Address how other disciplines approach your examples (connect with your audience already. Show about other topics as a reference point).

Definition 5: Offer an interesting phrase you would use to describe Family Science matters. You could mention why it's important to think specifically on Family.

What Can I Say? Define it. Illustrate it.

If you have 30 seconds or less, focus on steps 1 and 3. Give a clear description and real-world example.

Keep one fun example.

It's funny for your own pitch, it's help to give your more facts

Family Science is... the scientific study of families.
It's like the parent's version of psychology

Your Elevator Pitch Should Be...

- Easy to understand
- Memorable — not too much on numbers or dates
- Concise
- Interesting to everyone
- Engaged people
- Positive & fun

Tips for a Successful Pitch

- Take 10-15 seconds. You can share as much as you like
- Don't think you're being boring and over-explaining (it's not necessary to include all your knowledge)
- Keep it to 30 seconds max. If you have 30-60s, you can add a funny development related to the topic (keep it simple and fun)
- Don't worry about perfect flow charts — you can add them
- Remember that you're a human speaking to a human
