

The figure below shows the change over time in soil organic matter content.

Column	Type I, II, or III?	Description of soil type	Characteristic features that make this soil unique
1	Type I	Organic matter levels are very low, indicating that little energy (heat, water, and other environmental factors) is present; therefore little organic matter is present.	Large amounts of rock, little biological activity, low organic matter, relatively dry
2	Type II	Organic matter is present but not very much; there is little energy (heat, water, and other environmental factors) available.	Some biological activity (low), relatively dry to intermediate water
3	Type III	Organic matter levels are very high; indicating that there is a lot of energy (heat, water, and other environmental factors) available.	High organic matter, high biological activity, high water content

What is caused by geopositional distributions?

The number of plants in each population distribution pattern could be due to the following:

Type of distribution	Picture of this distribution	Why are these patterns?
Homogeneous		HOMOGENEITY Uniform moisture, equal temperatures, existing land clearing for growing, no barriers, low biological activity
Heterogeneous		HETEROGENEITY Uneven land clearing, no barriers
Stratified		STRATIFICATION Soil conditions like soil depth between high surface and deep soil, different soil textures, different soil depths
