

Award Ceremony Speech

Presentation Speech by Thorbjørn Jagland, Chairman of the Norwegian Nobel Committee, Oslo, 10 December 2013.

Your Majesties, Your Royal Highness, representatives of the Laureate, Excellencies, ladies and gentlemen,

The entry into force of the Chemical Weapons Convention in 1997 prohibiting the development, production, storage and use of chemical weapons states that the parties to the Convention are "Determined for the sake of all mankind, to exclude completely the possibility of the use of chemical weapons."

Is that not beautiful?

Still more beautiful: it can be achieved. We are in fact close to the target.

This is to a large degree due to the work of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), which was created to ensure the implementation of the Convention.

The Nobel Peace Prize for 2013 therefore goes most deservedly to an organisation and its personnel, who have been quietly working to remove an entire category of weapons.

Our congratulations!

And with this year's prize, we prompt those states that have not acceded to the convention to do so.

The use of chemicals in warfare is nearly as old as mankind. For thousands of years, spears and arrows have had poison applied to them to enhance their effect. Homer's Iliad and Odyssey tell us that such poisoned arrows were used by the parties to the Trojan War. Chinese Sun Tzu mentions the use of fire with various weapons. In Hinduism, the Law of Manu favours a ban on poison and fire arrows, recommending the poisoning of food and water instead.

Up through the centuries, there are masses of examples of the use of various chemical weapons.

In due course there followed demands for bans on such weapons. The Hague Convention from the Peace Congress of 1899, and the Convention from the Congress of 1907, recommended the prohibition of "poison and poison weapons" in the waging of war.

But it was so little use.
