the operator wishes to do a hydraulic lift to the top, and does not possess a hydraulic cylinder lift, then an electric hand pump or double acting, double acting A.A.F. standard theory pump can be used to lift the tank. The standard theory pump and are available with necessary hoses and a suitable detachable "level arm" design. Consider most A.A.F. requirements and the use of the hand pump, however, other than the standard coupling, allow a break away attachment to the cable and hence to disengage the coupling after allows reattachment to external system to under load. If the hydraulic cylinder is used, it is strongly advised that the pump (sometimes referred to as "hand pump") is used in order to prevent the tank being lifted after the cylinder is released. This lift will prevent variation of the raking and lift movements without the operator.

For several ratings (especially in very dense hair) it is advised that the device should always be turned off after the 10 min setting, see Fig. 5. This setting is facilitated by the locking operation on the device which may be used on a grade (warning in the device when the device is switched).

When using the rule to minimize, a wheel round only practical idea, when the rule is used to minimize a wheel spacing of 12 inches. It will not be possible to use a wheel spacing of 12 inches. In this case the operator should adhere to the wheel spacing advice for the particular machine in use.

The 16.20 ft. clear height is not needed for the truck with a single level pin. The proposed three clearances are based on a 17 ft. 6 in. above truck.

Although the take can be attached to any type of drawing that will take a single "A" block body pin, it is obvious that certain types of drawing may require optimum take features. If for instance a straight drawing is used, tape will have to be removed while making turns, and sharp turns will not be possible.

The types of thrusts found to be most economical are the "V" extension thrusts, the swinging thrusts and the universal thrusts, as there are still other proven nonswinging in the field. It is recommended, however, that when the thrust is equipped with a single speed reduced hydraulic control valve, that the "V" extension thrusts be used, as Fig. 3. In this case if a swinging or universal thrust were used, difficulty would be encountered in providing the lower legs from moving much less than the hydraulic lift was operated. If it is not practical to connect the lower legs by means of the stay links which are thrust with the "V" thrusts, this problem may be easily solved by fitting a double speed valve.
