such price, we get the quantity supplied by multiplying the quantity supplied to the typical firm times the additional supply caused by this. At a price of $1 each firm produces 6 dozen jeans in Panel A, so the market supply would also be 6 dozen jeans in Panel B. If the price increases to $1.1, each firm increases production to 7 dozen jeans in Panel A, so the market supply is 7 dozen jeans in Panel B.

When responses of firms are not identical but instead have different individual supply curves, to compute the market supply in the rest, we add the quantity supplied by the hundreds of firms in the market. The assumption that firms are identical is important. It makes it easier to derive the market supply curve from the supply curve of the typical firm. This is how we derive the results.

Figure 14 shows a perfectly competitive market in equilibrium. For a firm to produce profitably, its cost must be less than its revenue.

3. At the market level, the quantity of the product supplied equals the quantity demanded. The demand curve represents the firm's cost market supply curve at a price of $17 and a quantity of 1000 items per month (Panel A).

4. The supply line is the market's production of goods, given the market price. Given the market price of $17, each of the 100 firms manufactures goods by producing 10 items per month (Panel B).
