On the Role of Code Comparisons in Verification and Validation William Louis Oberkampff,Timothy Guy Trucano,Martin M. Pilch,2003 This report presents a perspective on the role of code comparison activities in verification and validation We formally define the act of code comparison as the Code Comparison Principle CCP and investigate its application in both verification and validation One of our primary conclusions is that the use of code comparisons for validation is improper and dangerous We also conclude that while code comparisons may be argued to provide a beneficial component in code verification activities there are higher quality code verification tasks that should take precedence Finally we provide a process for application of the CCP that we believe is minimal for achieving benefit in verification processes
