Abstract Staphylococcus aureus strains isolated from the nasal cavity of patients with nasal polyps were tested for sensitivity to various antibiotics. The results showed that the strains were highly resistant to penicillin, tetracycline, and erythromycin, and less resistant to vancomycin, rifampin, and fusidic acid. The results also showed that the strains were highly resistant to the combination of penicillin and erythromycin, and less resistant to the combination of vancomycin and rifampin. The results suggest that the strains of S. aureus isolated from the nasal cavity of patients with nasal polyps are highly resistant to various antibiotics, and that the combination of penicillin and erythromycin is not effective against these strains.
