

20) The authors list six key elements of reengineering. Pick any three and describe their contribution to the reengineering effort.

Answer: The six elements are:

1. Critical processes - focus on core business processes to reengineer, leave normal processes to incremental improvement
2. Strong leadership - senior executives must actively support reengineering or the effort will fail
3. Cross-functional teams - the team must be composed of each functional area affected by the change
4. Information technology - a primary enabler; most reengineering projects design processes around information flows
5. Clean slate philosophy - discard the old way of doing things and consider the way the customer wants to deal with the company
6. Process analysis - the reengineering team must understand things about the current process, how it performs, and have a grasp on the performance metrics
