Analysing Education Policy Meghan Stacey, Nicole Mockler, 2024-02-13

Analysing Education Policy Theory and Method provides a comprehensive overview of key approaches in critical education policy research. With chapters from internationally recognised and established scholars in the field, this book provides an authoritative account of how different questions may be approached and answered. Part 1 features chapters focused on text-based approaches to analysis, including critical discourse analysis, thinking with Foucault, Indigenist Policy Analysis, media analysis, the analysis of promotional texts in education, and the analysis of online networks. Part 2 features chapters focused on network ethnography, actor-network theory, materiality in policy, Institutional Ethnography, decolonising approaches to curriculum policy, working with children and young people, and working with education policy elites. These chapters are supported by an introduction to each section as well as an overall introduction and conclusion chapter from the editors drawing together key themes and ongoing considerations for the field. Critical education policy analysis takes many different forms, each of which works with distinctly different questions and fulfils different purposes. This book is the first to clearly map current common and influential approaches to answering these questions, providing important guidance for both new and established researchers. Posthumanism and the Digital University Lesley Gourlay, 2020-12-10

It is a commonplace in educational policy and theory to claim that digital technology has transformed the university, the nature of learning, and even the essence of what it means to be a scholar or a student. However, these claims have not always been based on strong research evidence. What are students and scholars actually doing in the day-to-day life of the digital university? This book examines in detail how the world of the digital interacts with texts, artefacts, devices, and humans in the contemporary university setting. Weaving together perspectives from a range of thinkers and disciplinary sources, Lesley Gourlay draws on ideas from posthuman and new materialist theory in particular to open up our understanding about how digital knowledge practices operate. She proposes that digital engagement in the university should not be regarded as virtual or disembodied but instead may be understood as a complex set of entanglements of the body, texts, and material artefacts, making a case that agency and the ways in which knowledge emerges should be regarded as more than human.

Innovations in Educational Ethnography George Spindler, Lorie Hammond, 2012-10-12

This volume focuses on and exemplifies how ethnography, a research tool devoted to looking at human interaction as a cultural process rather than individual psychology, can shed light on educational processes framed by the complex internationalized societies in which we live today. Part I offers theoretical chapters about ethnography and examples of innovative ethnography from particular perspectives. In Part II, the emphasis is on the application of ethnographic approaches to educational settings. Each contribution not only takes the reader on a thoughtful and enlightening journey but raises issues that are important to both educators and ethnographers including the relationship of researcher to subject the meaning of participant in participant observation and ways to give voice to disenfranchised players and on the complex ways in which all parties experience identities such as race in the modern world

Innovations in Educational Ethnography Theory Methods and Results is a product of both continuity and change It presents current writings from mentors in the field of ethnography and education as well of the work of their students and of educators engaged in cultural studies of their work In many ways it provides fresh new vistas on the old questions that have always guided ethnographic research and can be used as a survey both of what ethnography has been and what it is becoming This book is the work of many hands and provides excellent examples of trends in both basic and applied ethnography of education These two kinds of work augment and reinforce each other and also represent important current research directions in depth reflection on the process of ethnography itself and an application of its insights to teaching and learning in schools universities and communities No one philosophy guides the contributions to this volume nor were they chosen as exemplary of a particular approach yet foundational understandings and principles of ethnography shine through the work in both predictable and unexpected ways

A Multimodal Ethnography of Two Forced Migrants John Callaghan, 2011 This study addresses the need for detailed accounts of how English language learners engage in face to face interaction in naturally occurring English language mediated contexts its aim being to enlarge the SLA and language and migration databases and to inform ESOL teaching practice materials curriculum and assessment design and institutional policy Focusing on two forced migrants and a seven minute service encounter in a hardware store and employing ecological and sociocognitive theory and co ethnographic methods drawn from a range of strategies including linguistic ethnography nexus analysis and multi modal interactional analysis the study investigates how actors align their histories of practice to contexts of interaction viewing contexts broadly as co occurring processes involving objects built environments interaction orders and other social actors and all processes as the products of their own semiotic histories The study also explores participants understandings of such interaction how it matters to them what they invest in it and why Findings include profound differences between participants in terms of the issues under investigation differences linked in the study to personal and cultural histories of practice And here analysis suggests the important role of affect in influencing evaluation action adaptation to new and in this case liminal and largely migrant populated environments and thus to the use learning of language Also observed was the importance of communicative rather than narrowly linguistic competence with competence heavily reliant on domain and genre relevant resources a finding which has clear implications for pedagogy The study therefore indicates an important role for co ethnography as a pedagogic method and given the profound differences disclosed both in subjects and contexts and the limited scope of microethnographic study suggests the need for further research in this area
