

Title: "Ramadan and the Importance of Fasting"

Once upon a time, there was a young boy named Muham. Muham was a kind and honest boy. Ramadan and his family had been living in the United States for about 10 years. Muham's parents taught him about the Islamic religion and the importance of fasting during Ramadan.

"Fasting means not eating or drinking anything, not even water," explained Muham's mother. "It is an easy way to purify your body and to develop self-control and discipline."

Muham was amazed by this and wanted to learn more. His mother taught him about the Quran, Muham recited the Quran and performed some prayers. She explained that the month of Ramadan is the month of fasting, an easy religion and the day for all to gather together.

The next day, Muham and his friends helped Ramadan and his family prepare for the big day. Muham's friends were fascinated and amazed at every detail just like Muham. In the morning Muham was happy to break his fast with his friends and decided to invite his friends to have their meal and breakfast.

When the morning came, Muham and his friends had dinner together in their home first. They were so hungry and thirsty, and they were also grateful. They both appreciated. They realized that fasting was not just about not eating or drinking, and also required learning to be grateful. They were truly used and absorbing knowledge from Ramadan and their mom.

At the end of Ramadan, Muham and his friends had a dinner to say adieu. They said farewell and thanked all their friends, grandparents, and neighbors. They presented the children for performing their tasks throughout last year.

The end.
