Mens Discourses Of Depression:

Men's Discourses of Depression D. Galasinski, 2008-07-10 An original and timely study of men's experiences of depression in which the author tackles the discursively constructed relationship between the self and depression showing its linguistic and social complexity and analyses the relationship between depression and masculinity

Understandings of Men's Depression in Published Research, News Media Portrayals, and Men's Accounts of Their Experiences

Brett David Scholz, 2015 Within the next two decades depression is predicted to become the leading cause of disease burden in developed countries and the second leading cause of disease burden globally There is a relatively large body of research on women's experiences of depression but research on men's depression and their experiences with depression has been fragmented The aim of this dissertation is to contribute to the understanding of depression in men through the triangulation of three diverse sources of data that deal with men's experiences of depression These data sources are existing published research studies media portrayals and in depth interviews with men Applying a systematic review methodology the first study explores current knowledge about the factors associated with depressive symptoms in men These factors include social and demographic factors occupational factors health behavioural factors and psychological or cognitive factors I discuss the relevance of these findings in relation to diathesis stress models of depression and to theories of pathoplasticity which describe an individual's vulnerability to potential stressors In the second study I extend the theory that softer masculinities are becoming increasingly valued in modern society through an investigation of how depressed men are positioned by particular discourses in news media articles I explore news media portrayals of men's communication about their depression in relation to theories of stigma and masculinity The findings of this study highlight the role media can play in reproducing or challenging such stigma The third and final study addresses the limited research on men's subjectivities of distress I add to the body of knowledge about men's discourses of depression by exploring how men draw on medical understandings of depression and how they talk about the broader social contexts of their experiences The focus of this study is to explore the understandings of depression experienced by a group of Australian men with high depressive symptoms This study utilises a thematic analytic framework to provide an overview of men's subjectivities of depression The findings of this study provide more depth to knowledge of men's understandings of depression This dissertation has several theoretical contributions and implications for clinical practice public health services and policy makers The findings provide health practitioners and the public health sector with comprehensive knowledge about the relevant factors associated with men's depression This dissertation also presents an overview of factors discussed by a group of men with depression This provides an understanding of how men make sense of their condition The research findings highlight how discourses of men's depression can work to dispel or reproduce stigma around men's mental health concerns These findings are particularly relevant to policy makers for their debate and development of the gender equality in mental health outcomes

and Mental Illness Dariusz Galasinski,2013-11-12 Fathers Fatherhood and Mental Illness provides the first book length study of fathers experiences of mental illness arguing that a discourse analytic focus upon the experience of mental illness is relevant both to social scientists and mental health scholars and practitioners

Discourse and Transformation in Central and Eastern Europe Aleksandra Galasinska,Aleksandra Galasińska,Michał Krzyzanowski,2009-02-15 This volume explores the discursive nature of post 1989 social change in Central and Eastern Europe Through a set of national case studies the construction of post communist transformation is explored from the point of view of accelerating and unique dynamics of linguistic and discursive practices

Language of Illness Jonathan Charteris-Black,Clive Seale,2010-07-07 Gender and the Language of Illness is based on the findings of a large number of interviews with people talking about their experiences of many different types of illness Their use of language shows the influences of gender social class and age and reveals conformity and resistance to gender stereotypes Women express negative feelings towards illness more confidently than men who are usually more hesitant about expressing a personal response Women tend to see illness as an opportunity for self transformation while men often distance themselves from the experience by pretending it is happening to someone else Women from a high social class are more critical of the health system and older women see themselves as authorities on illness and suffering However there is also resistance to stereotypes by higher class and younger men who redefine their gender identity by using feminine language and by treating illness as an opportunity to develop a new dynamic sense of self Publisher
