However, pilots, NFOs and SWOs viewed their detailers as being less credible, honest and accurate at T2 than at T1. Officer evaluations of the assignments they had received in the past produced the largest correlations at T1 and T2: 20s and low 30s with an individual's commitment to a 20 year naval career. Officer Career Development Regina L. Burch, Gerald L. Russell, Navy Personnel Research and Development Center (U.S.), 1991. An extensive research project was initiated in 1981 which investigated the career development and decision making processes of Naval officers. An officer career questionnaire was sent to a sub sample N 20 999 of the larger population N 23 769. These questionnaires were administered during 1982 and then readministered during 1986-1987. As a result of this study two databases were constructed: 1 a cross sectional database that includes data for all individuals who completed a survey in FY86-FY87 N 12 319 and 2 a longitudinal database that includes data for all individuals who completed a questionnaire in FY82 N 9 109 and in FY86-FY87 N 5 633. The documentation for the longitudinal database is provided in two separate volumes. The present documentation is the first of this two part series and provides the data layout for all items included in the FY82 survey.
