Greece International Monetary Fund. European Dept.,2017-02-07 This 2016 Article IV Consultation highlights that Greece has made significant progress in unwinding its macroeconomic imbalances since the onset of its financial crisis However extensive fiscal consolidation and internal devaluation have come at a high cost to society reflected in declining incomes and exceptionally high unemployment. Growth is projected to accelerate in the next few years conditional on a full and timely implementation of the authorities adjustment program. On the basis of Greece's current policy adjustment program, long term growth is expected to reach just under 1 percent and the primary fiscal surplus is projected to come in at about 1.5 percent of GDP. Downside risks to the macroeconomic and fiscal outlook remain significant.
