Music Wars 1937-1945 Patrick Bade, 2015-06-10 Music Wars 1937-1945 Patrick Bade, 2012 Music played an unprecedented role in World War II Whether live or through the media of radio film and gramophone records it was used by all sides for propaganda and morale boosting The mightiest musical weapon of the war was Swing an irresistible force that even the Nazis attempted to harness Ultimately the music that most potently evokes the emotions and experiences of the war is that of the sentimental songs of loss and separation Vera Lynn singing We ll meet again and Zarah Leander singing Ich weiss es wird einmal ein Wunder geschehen The Routledge Handbook to Music under German Occupation, 1938-1945 David Fanning, Erik Levi, 2019-12-06

Following their entry into Austria and the Sudetenland in the late 1930s the Germans attempted to impose a policy of cultural imperialism on the countries they went on to occupy during World War II Almost all music institutions in the occupied lands came under direct German control or were subject to severe scrutiny and censorship the prime objective being to change the musical fabric of these nations and force them to submit to the strictures of Nazi ideology This pioneering collection of essays is the first in the English language to look in more detail at the musical consequences of German occupation during a dark period in European history It embraces a wide range of issues presenting case studies involving musical activity in a number of occupied European cities as well as in countries that were part of the Axis or had established close diplomatic relations with Germany The wartime careers and creative outputs of individual musicians who were faced with the dilemma of either complying with or resisting the impositions of the occupiers are explored In addition there is some reflection on the post war implications of German occupation for the musical environment in Europe Music under German Occupation is written for all music lovers students professionals and academics who have particular interests in 20th century music and or the vicissitudes of European cultural life during World War II

Propaganda in War, 1939-1945 Michael Balfour, 1979 Bogen beskriver og analyserer detaljeret hvordan krigens nyheder blev behandlet b de fra engelsk og fra tysk side illustreret med talrige eksempler fra rene under 2 Verdenskrig Forfatteren var ansat i Ministry of Information som sorterede nyhederne til hjemmefronten og The Political Warfare Executive som sendte propaganda til tyskerne og til de tysk besatte lande og som samtidig i Intelligence Directorate fulgte den tyske propaganda hver dag Bogen bygger p materiale fra b de tyske og engelske arkiver

Battle for Music John Vincent Morris, 2011 The use of classical music as a tool of propaganda in Britain during the War can be seen to have been an effective deployment both of the German masters and of a new spirit of England in the furtherance of British values and its point of view Several distinctions were made between various forms of propaganda and institutions of government played complementary roles during the War Propaganda took on various guises including the need to boost morale on the Home Front in live performances At the outset of the War orchestras were under threat with the experience of the London Philharmonic exemplifying the difficulties involved in maintaining a professional standard of performance The activities of bodies such as the Council for the Encouragement of Music and the Arts played a role in encouraging music as did the British Council's Music Advisory Committee which co-operated with the BBC and the government activities including the commissioning of new music. The BBC's policies towards music broadcasting were arrived at in reaction to public demand rather than from an ideological basis and were developed through the increasing monitoring of German broadcasts and a growing understanding of what was required for both home and overseas transmission. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony became an important part of the Victory campaign and there was even an attempt at reviving the Handel Cult of the Nineteenth Century. German music was also used in feature film but pre-eminent composers such as William Walton and Ralph Vaughan Williams contributed to the War effort by writing film music too. The outstanding example is Vaughan Williams' music for Powell and Pressburger's Ministry of Information sponsored 49th Parallel in which the relationship between music and politics is made in a reference to Thomas Mann's The Magic Mountain. Vaughan Williams' non-film output included the greatest British orchestral work to have come out of the War, his Fifth Symphony, a work that encapsulated all the values that the institutions of public life sought to promote.

Culture and Propaganda in World War II John Morris, 2014. The wartime period in Britain is now seen as an extremely fertile period of British creativity in music, film and art. Often these projects were funded and supported by the government who saw its role as a custodian of British culture and by extension of British values at a time when those values seemed under great threat. In the late thirties the Nazi Party had stressed the superiority of Germanic culture and the promotion of Richard Wagner and Carl Orff was central to Hitler's cultural program. In Britain the War Office under Winston Churchill chose to promote Edward Elgar and Hubert Parry but also to appropriate and de-Nazify Ludwig van Beethoven whose Fifth Symphony was used extensively in wartime broadcasts and has since become synonymous with VE Day. Meanwhile the work of Ralph Vaughan Williams whose music was commissioned by Powell and Pressburger for use in 49th Parallel reclaimed a particularly English past stretching back to the Tudors. While artists such as John Piper, Eric Ravillious and Evelyn Dunbar produced works specifically commissioned by the state which were intended to commemorate and glorify Britain, the British Council and the BBC played an active role in commissioning and broadcasting their musical equivalents. In film Humphrey Jennings's documentaries were designed to further push the wartime agenda along with films produced by Ealing Studios. Here John Morris assesses the history of this body of work, shedding new light on the period. A cultural history of music in wartime based on detailed archival research. Culture and Propaganda in World War II is essential reading for historians of the period, musicians, film scholars and propaganda analysts. Bloomsbury Publishing.

Music and Propaganda in the Short Twentieth Century Massimiliano Sala, 2014. This volume investigates the relationships between music and propaganda in the twentieth century. Music can be utilised to attribute and ascribe multivalent meanings. Due to its great evocative power it has often been directly exploited by regimes and governments. In what ways does music convey the messages of propaganda? Which are the political and economical implications behind musical propaganda Much has been written about the relationship between music and propaganda during the two world wars but the post war dimensions of the topic also require investigation
