U.S. Navy Medicine ,1970 Navy Medical Newsletter ,1970 Hospital corpsman. ,1981 Infectious Diseases and Arthropods Jerome Goddard,2018-05-04 With the exception of a few tropical medicine schools worldwide current medical education programs include almost zero discussion of the interface between infectious diseases and entomology That is why this book was initially published in the first edition almost 17 years ago The third edition of this valuable infectious disease entomology book updates all existing chapters with the newest scientific developments described in the medical and entomological literature in addition to covering 10 entirely new topics not addressed in previous editions which include arthropod identification controversies early beginnings of public health and disease control red meat allergy updates on vaccine development for dengue and malaria discussion of Chikungunya and Zika viruses American Boutonnnneuse Fever the newest controversies in Lyme disease recent findings of viruses in ticks bed bug bite reactions Morgellons disease an imaginary infectious disease Emerging Infectious Diseases ,2004 U.S. Naval flight surgeon's manual Biotechnology, Inc,1968 Upper Respiratory Infections and Environmental Conditions in a U.S. Navy Shipboard Population Edward D. Gorham,1997 Two mechanisms of upper respiratory infection URI transmission have been described 1 direct or fomite contact with self inoculation and 2 transmission via aerosolized droplet nuclei This study was undertaken to evaluate the relative contributions of these mechanisms in two populations living aboard Navy ships A cross sectional survey of URI symptoms was performed among 1 990 people living aboard 34 ships Subjects completed questionnaires ascertaining symptoms during the previous 30 days and occupational and environmental conditions including the number of occupants sharing sleeping compartments A separate study was performed of 1 777 people who slept in 47 compartments aboard an aircraft carrier This study used medical department diagnoses of URI and carbon dioxide measurements in sleeping compartments to assess ventilation The 30 day period prevalence of URI symptoms aboard the 34 ships was 52% among men and 64% among women The rate in current smokers was 18% higher than in never smokers Individuals reporting dust exposure had 23% higher rate s than those not exposed Crew in the highest sleeping occupancy quartile 80 persons had 31% higher rates than those in the lowest quartile 1 24 persons This association persisted after adjustment for gender age race type of ship and occupational exposures The mean carbon dioxide concentration in sleeping compartments aboard the aircraft carrier was 1 072 ppm Incidence rates were not associated with population density or carbon dioxide level in sleeping compartments URI incidence was 70% higher in compartments with high relative humidity Results of the 34 ship study support previous research indicating the role of high sleeping space occupancy in URI spread The aircraft carrier study did not support an association between URI incidence and high carbon dioxide concentration as a marker of poor ventilation and was not supportive of aerosolized droplet nuclei as a primary transmission mechanism in this setting The association with high relative humidity is consistent with research demonstrating longer duration of virus survival in humid environments and supportive of fomite transmission with self inoculation The occurrence of epidemics following two port visits supports an epidemic model of URI transmission from port populations to susceptible individuals aboard ship Army and Navy Register ,1951 Army-Navy-Air Force Register and Defense Times ,1954 Guide for Naval Medical Department Officers United States.
