The Red Romance Book Andrew Lang, I once read a book about a poor little lonely boy in a great house with a large library This boy was pale dull and moping Nobody knew what was the matter with him But somebody tracked him into the library and saw him take a huge thick black book half as tall as himself out of a bookcase and sit down and read it The name of the book was Poleyxander So he sat and sobbed over Poleyxander because it was so very dull and so very long There were 800 pages and he had only read sixty seven But some very stupid grown up person had told him that he must always begin a book at the beginning and if he once began he must read every word of it and read nothing else till he had finished every word of it The boy saw that he would die of weariness long before he reached the end of Poleyxander but he stuck to it like the other boy who stood by the burning deck long after it was time for him to go So Poleyxander was taken away from him and locked up and so his life was saved Now in the first place Poleyxander was a romance but it was not like the romances in this book for it was dreadfully long and mainly about the sorrows of lovers who cannot get married That could not amuse a small boy In the second place every boy should stop reading a book as soon as he finds that he does not like it just as you are not expected to eat more mutton than you want to eat Lesson books are another thing you have to read them and if you do not you will get into trouble They are not meant to be amusing but to teach Latin grammar or geography or arithmetic which are not gay As to this book of Romances if you do not like one story give it up and try another If you do not like any of them read something else that you do like Now what are romances They are grown up people s fairy tales or story books but they are the kind of story books that grown up people read long ago when there were castles and knights and tournaments and the chief business of gentlemen was to ride about in full armour fighting while ladies sat at home doing embroidery work or going to see the men tilt at tournaments just as they go to see cricket matches now But they liked tournaments better because they understood the rules of the game Anybody could see when one knight knocked another down horse and all but many ladies do not understand leg before wicket or stumping The stories that they read were called romances but were in prose Before people could read they were not in prose but in poetry and were recited by minstrels Mrs Lang who did the stories in this book says Many hundreds of years ago when most of these stories were told in the halls of great castles the lives of children were very different from what they are now The little girls were taught by their mothers maidens to spin and embroider or make simple medicines from the common herbs and the boys learnt to ride and tilt and shoot with bows and arrows but their tasks done no one paid any further heed to them They had very few games and in the long winter evenings the man who went from house to house telling or singing the tales of brave deeds must have been welcome indeed From him the children who early became men and women heard of the evil fate that awaited cowardice and treachery and grew to understand that it was their duty through life to help those that were weaker than themselves That was long long ago when nobody but priests and a very few gentlemen could read and write They just listened to stories in rhyme which the minstrels sang striking their harps at the end of each verse The stories were really fairy tales dressed up and spun out and instead of a boy or a king or a princess with no name the old fairy adventures were said to have happened to people with names King Arthur or Charlemagne or Bertha Broadfoot A little real history came in but altered and mixed up with fairy tales and done into rhyme Later more and more people learned to read and now the long poems were done into prose and written in books not printed but written books and these were the Romances very long indeed all about fighting and love making and giants and dwarfs and magicians and enchanted castles and dragons and flying horses These romances were the novels of the people of the Middle Ages about whom you can read in the History Books of Mrs Markham They were not much like the novels which come from the library for your dear mothers and aunts There is not much fighting in them though there is any amount of love making and there are no giants and if there is a knight he is usually a grocer or a doctor quite the wrong sort of knight Here is the beginning of a celebrated novel Comedy is a game played to throw reflections upon social life and it deals with human nature in the drawing rooms of civilised men and women You do not want to read any more of that novel It is not at all like a good old romance of knights and dragons and enchanted princesses and strong wars The knights and ladies would not have looked at such a book all about drawing rooms couldn't make more awkward or a man I couldn't embarrass myself in front of. Case in point: I was relieving myself in the bushes after a really long trek up the mountain. Only to accuse the hot sheriff who stops to help of spying on me. But Brock isn't like everyone else. He looks at me and sees something he likes. Still, this thing between us is too good to be true, right? After all, I write fairytales; I don't live them. Brock Zoey isn't the typical tourist I meet. She's young, adorkable, and so damn sweet. Definitely too sweet for the dirty things I have in mind when I see that cute derriere. She's just passing through, which means this can only be a vacation getaway romance. Except that doesn't sit right with me. Before she leaves, I plan to show this beautiful novelist that I want to star in the love story of her life.
