In the Broward County Public Schools, we used The Language of Literature textbook series published by McDougal Littell prior to the new textbook adoption. The opening unit of the grade 11 textbook in that series contains the Native American stories "The World on the Turtle's Back," "Coyote and the Buffalo," and "Fox and Coyote and Whale." If you do not have access to the textbook, you will be able to find the stories online through the links below (or simply Google the titles and the word "text"). The links may not provide the exact texts as those that appear in the Littell textbook (some are abridged), but they are a good introduction to Native American storytelling.

Getting to the Core of Literacy for History/Social Studies, Science, and Technical Subjects, Grades 6-12 Vicky Giouroukakis, Maureen Connolly, 2013-05-14 Literacy is not just for English teachers anymore. The new Common Core English Language Arts Standards aren't just for English teachers. Fluent reading and writing are critically important to the study of history, social studies, science, and technical subjects too. What's more, the progress your students make is directly tied to their ability to process information they read and to express their ideas in writing. So how do you make literacy a focus of your teaching without taking time away from essential content? This practical resource packed with teacher-tested CCSS-based sample lessons shows you how using the Backward Design approach to set and meet your goals. Each lesson template includes the teaching strategies you'll utilize, ways to incorporate technology and media, variations for differentiation, and interdisciplinary connections. Links to the work of major educational theorists. Following these models, you'll set the CCSS in your sights and develop lessons that both meet standards and fit your classroom. Before you know it, you'll be infusing reading and writing across your curriculum in purposeful and meaningful ways.
