such price, we get the quantity supplied by the firm as  $Q_1$  by multiplying the quantity supplied by the typical firm (here the individual supply curve) by 100. At a price of $10, such firm produces at these point B in Panel A, as the market supply (with all firms) is Panel B. If the price increases to $11, such firm increases production to 110 shown in Panel A, so the market supply is 110 shown (point C in Panel B).

What happens if there are not identical but instead have different individual supply curves? To compute the market supply in this case, we add the quantities supplied by the hundreds of firms in the market. The assumption that firms are identical is however it makes it easier to derive the market supply curve from the supply curve of the typical firm, but it has no change the analysis.

Market Equilibrium

Figure 6.1 shows a perfectly competitive market in equilibrium. For a short-run equilibrium, two conditions are satisfied:

Market Equilibrium

In Figure 6.1, the market demand curve represents the short-run aggregate demand in a perfectly competitive market (at a price of $1). The supply curve shows the aggregate supply of perfectly competitive firms. The firm's demand is the average cost of the market's output, so it makes zero economic profit.

- At the market level, the quantity of the product supplied equals the quantity demanded. The demand curve intersects the short-run market supply curve at a price of $1 and a quantity of 1000 dollars per minute (Panel A).
- The upward line in the market determines its profit, given the market price. Given the market price of $1, each of the 100 firms maximizes profit by producing 1000 units per minute (Panel B).
