

Figure 6.1. Ecotype crossing and transplant experiments investigating partial migration in Norwegian Arctic charr between river systems exhibiting migratory and resident ecotypes (Salangen River) and resident-only ecotypes (Voss River). Nordeng (1983) crossed each ecotype with itself from the Salangen River population and found that, regardless of whether offspring were released into the Salangen or the Voss Rivers, all ecotypes were expressed in the next generation. In controlled rearing experiments, Nordeng observed that the ratio of offspring ecotypes was influenced by the source population and early feeding conditions. Within generations, ecotypes can exhibit differential migration (switching) as shown in the inset. Figure concept from Adams 1999 and adapted from Klemetsen 2010, with permission.
