Morphometrics with R Julien Claude, 2008-12-15 This book aims to explain how to use R to perform morphometrics Morphometric analysis is the study of shape and size variations and covariations and their covariations with other variables Morphometrics is thus deeply rooted within statistical sciences While most applications concern biology morphometrics is becoming common tools used in archeological palaeontological geographical or medicine disciplines Since the recent formalizations of some of the ideas of predecessors such as Darcy Thompson and thanks to the development of computer technologies and new ways for appraising shape changes and variation morphometrics have undergone and are still undergoing a revolution Most techniques dealing with statistical shape analysis have been developed in the last three decades and the number of publications using morphometrics is increasing rapidly However the majority of these methods cannot be implemented in available software and therefore prospective students often need to acquire detailed knowledge in informatics and statistics before applying them to their data With acceleration in the accumulation of methods accompanying the emerging science of statistical shape analysis it is becoming important to use tools that allow some autonomy R easily helps fulfill this need R is a language and an environment for statistical computing and graphics Although there is an increasing number of computer applications that perform morphometrics using R has several advantages that confer to users considerable power and possible new horizons in a world that requires rapid adaptability

A Morphometric Investigation Into the Origin(s) of Anatomically Modern Humans Phillip J. Habgood, 2003 This study investigates the origin of anatomically modern Homo sapiens throughout the Old World The results from multivariate analyses of cranial and mandibular metric and non metric data and morphological studies are used to investigate when anatomically modern humans first appeared in sub Saharan Africa north Africa western Asia Europe Australasia and east Asia to ascertain what model best explains the world wide appearance of anatomically modern Homo sapiens It is found that the morphological archaeological and genetic data provides a complex image of the transition that necessitates an explanation combining some local continuity some population replacement and significant multidirectional gene flow This complex phenomenon can best be described as an Assimilation and Replacement model where Europe saw the replacement of the Neanderthals by anatomically modern Homo sapiens whereas eastern Asia experienced the assimilation of anatomically modern humans and the archaic indigenous populations

Ontogenetic Morphometrics of Some Late Cretaceous Trochospiral Planktonic Foraminifera from the Austral Realm Brian T. Huber, 1994 Biometric analysis of ontogenetic changes in test morphology is employed to determine the taxonomic status of several trochospiral planktonic foraminiferal species from southern high latitude Upper Cretaceous sediments Ontogenetic morphometric data obtained from specimens of Hedbergella sliteri Huber Archaeoglobigerina australis Huber both micromorph and normal sized populations and Archaeoglobigerina mateola Huber are compared with topotype populations of Hedbergella holmdelensis Olsson H. monmouthensis Olsson Costellagerina pilula Belford and Rugoglobigerina rugosa Plummer Southern South Atlantic specimens of Archaeoglobigerina bosquensis Pessagno and Archaeoglobigerina cretacea d'Orbigny are also analyzed for comparison Numerous biometric data measured from exterior observations of whole tests contact microradiographs and Scanning Electron Microscope SEM micrograph images of serially dissected foraminifera are used to characterize developmental changes in morphology of the planktonic foraminiferal species The most useful variables for discriminating taxonomic differences are discussed for each method Results indicate that the ontogenetic morphometric approach to study of planktonic foraminifera can be effectively used to resolve problems in taxonomic classification particularly for species that appear homeomorphic in exterior view This approach was particularly useful for demonstrating that the ontogenetic morphologies of A. australis, C. pilula and R. rugosa are very different and therefore previous assignment of A. australis morphotypes to various species of Rugoglobigerina and Costellagerina were incorrect This study also demonstrates that the growth morphology of the new high latitude species H. sliteri significantly differs from H. holmdelensis and H. monmouthensis thus confirming recognition of H. sliteri as a valid taxon However taxonomic uncertainty persists for some high latitude morphotypes that have external characteristics similar to R. rugosa e.g. faint umbilical apertures faint costellae that are meridionally aligned presence of tegilla but ontogenetic morphologies more similar to A. australis Morphologic changes during ontogeny including changes in 1 shell pore characteristics pore diameter pore density and porosity 2 rates of increase in cross sectional chamber area 3 apertural position 4 chamber surface ornamentation and 5 umbilical diameter were used to recognize ontogenetic stages in the foraminiferal shells These include the prolocular juvenile neanic and adult stages The growth patterns of H. holmdelensis, H. monmouthensis, H. sliteri and C. pilula are very uniform and do not show discernable transitions from the juvenile to neanic and adult stages All four ontogenetic stages were recognized in A. australis, A. bosquensis, A. mateola, A. cretacea and R. rugosa although the abruptness of the transitions and the chamber number where these transitions occur are variable within and between species Recognition of these growth stages enables taxonomic identification of pre adult morphologies that occur in smaller size fractions This is particularly useful since these smaller forms have dominated in unstable environments such as the highly seasonal circum antarctic oceans      Classification Literature Automated Search Service ,1978      Acta Theriologica ,2009      Canadian Journal of Genetics and Cytology ,1985      Acta Anatomica ,1945 International archives of anatomy histology embryology and cytology      Transactions of the Royal Society of South Australia, Incorporated Royal Society of South Australia,1991      Witthayāsān Kasētsārt ,2015-12

Paleobiology ,1997      The Evolution of Plant Architecture Marie Helena Kurmann,Alan R. Hemsley,Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew,1999 Plant architecture is the morphological manifestation of the genetic make up of a plant at any one stage during its development Application of accurate architectural models provides a wealth of information about living and extinct plants especially in regard to growth pattern and development The Evolution of Plant Architecture brings together contributions from specialists in many different fields including ecology palaeobotany systematics and evolution
