Young children are highly active learners, and centers are their places. Centers are interactive, allowing each child to work at his or her own level. This type of learning allows children to learn successfully, and it also creates the opportunity for peer learning. Development is the process of growing older, or older children learn the lessons of life better, although younger ones can learn old ones. Instead of learning how to write or count independently of others, children learn by working right next to the rest of the class, both in the foreground and the background.

The value of cooperative projects in the classroom is that children can still learn even if they are not the group. An easy way to accomplish this is to have children work in pairs. This way, one child can help another. This would be a good way to teach children about different cultures because they may have different ways of doing things. Both cooperative projects and individual projects have their place. Individual projects are good for children who are more advanced. The children can learn more easily and efficiently, but a classroom can benefit from a variety of activities.
