to predict which team in the matchup would win or lose We aggregated our pace adjusted box score metrics using two different methodologies rolling eight game spans and accumulated year to date statistics and then applied these datasets to four different modeling implementations logistic regression random forest XGBoost and neural networks Our results were optimistic as all models were able to accurately predict the winner of a matchup at a rate of greater than 60% thus outperforming random chance The final part of this research involved seeing how our best model fared versus the real world betting lines for the 2019 20 NBA season We used our logistic model to get a win probability for each team in every matchup and compared that result to the probability as defined by the sportsbook odds This betting edge the discrepancy between our model and the sportsbook was used in a variety of betting strategies Using our best fixed wagering technique we were able to generate a return on investment of about 5% over the course of the entire season Using a more complicated wagering method known as the Kelly criterion a strategy that adjusts the amount of money wagered based on the size of the edge identified we were able to almost double our investment with a return of about 98% In summary building a betting model to gain a gambling edge was determined to be quite achievable
