underwent a very ambitious reform programme in 2003 the so called Health Transformation Programme Access to healthcare in Turkey has greatly increased with the attainment of Universal Health Coverage as also demonstrated by improvement in health outcomes most notably around maternal and child health and infectious diseases However despite these significant achievements Turkey has a significant way to travel to deliver high quality health services to its population Governance of the health system is highly centralised and typified by directive control from the Ministry of Health and information collected in different part of the system is not always fully exploited The OECD Review of Health Care Quality in Turkey recommends a number of changes to address these shortcomings The key recommendations are that i Turkey needs to develop robust systems to standardise and monitor the quality of care encourage continuous professional development and incorporate patient views ii some loosening of the governance structure would be welcome to allow regions greater flexibility to assess and respond to local health needs and to continue to provide health workers with incentives for improve quality iii data on health sector activity and outcomes need to be made more available and more usable for individual patients and clinicians while greater effort is needed to increase the robustness of Turkey s information systems at national level and harmonise performance measures to OECD and other international comparators OECD Reviews of Health Care

Quality: Czech Republic 2014 Raising Standards OECD,2014-06-25 This book presents a comprehensive review of health care quality in the Czech Republic OECD Reviews of Health Care Quality - Czech Republic 2014 Oecd,2014-06-25

This book presents a comprehensive review of health care quality in the Czech Republic It finds that over the past 20 years the Czech Republic witnessed the unprecedented gains in quality of health care and life expectancy and successfully transferred its Semashko system into the modern accessible health care system with private public mix of providers

Nevertheless the health care system in the Czech Republic still has some way to go to achieve the outcomes of the best performing OECD members While some of the gap might be caused by the one of the lowest levels of health care expenditures among OECD countries 7.2% GDP in 2011 there are possibilities to improve the outcomes without incurring much of the additional costs The Czech authorities should reach a consensus on the development of quality of care and data infrastructure and aim for sustainable long term initiatives undisturbed by the political cycles in both of these areas While the adverse events reporting and voluntary accreditation are the good steps towards the accountability of the providers the government should do more in this area undertake the effort to broaden the accreditation process and include outpatient care and link public health authorities to the quality agenda of inpatient care In the area of data infrastructure more data should be gathered the process of data gathering should be streamlined and administrative burden for the providers lowered primarily via the merging the data collecting agencies Finally without the active participation of health insurance funds and proper reimbursement mechanisms in place the quality agenda will not be perceived as the priority

OECD Reviews of Health Care Quality OECD Reviews of Health Care Quality: Korea 2012 Raising Standards OECD,2012-05-02 This is the first country report in a new OECD series evaluating the quality of health care across OECD countries whether care is safe effective and responsive to patients needs
