The Boston Review of Books and Ideas

- The document explained why the American colonists should declare independence from Britain.
- It said that all people were born with "unalienable rights" that meant rights that cannot be taken away, like liberty.
- It stated that if the government takes away these rights, people should be free to create a new government.
 - o The colonists stated that the British government had taken away these rights, for example, by taxing the colonists without giving them any representation in Parliament.
- However, the document said the colonists' people might be under their own government. Lastly, the Declaration ended with all of the signs reading "We, the United States, are joined with 'These States, the Colonies, and several others'."
