One Night In The Everglades Long Term Ecological Research:

One Night in the Everglades Laurel Larsen, 2012-06-16 Follow two scientists as they spend a night in the Everglades collecting water samples photographing wildlife and sloshing through marshes in an attempt to understand this mysterious ecosystem Part of a long term effort to return the Everglades to a natural state after a century of development the scientists try to figure out what the river of grass was like prior to human settlement Along the way they deal with razor sharp sawgrass and alligators and turtles and are even surprised by the sudden presence of what is known in the Everglades as a frog gigger one who hunts and collects frogs for food Published in cooperation with the Long Term Ecological Research Network which is funded by the National Science Foundation Ecological Society of America ... Annual Meeting Abstracts Ecological Society of America. Meeting, 2005 Degradation, Conservation and Ecological Restoration of Seagrass Beds under Intensifying Global Changes Shaochun Xu, Juan D. Gaitan-Espitia, Richard K. F. Unsworth, 2025-12-11 Seagrasses are submerged marine angiosperms that are widely distributed along the tropical and temperate coastlines of the world Seagrass beds provide habitats foods and nurseries for a variety of marine organisms increase water clarity by enhancing sedimentation and removing nutrients from the water column by regulating nutrient cycles and function as key sites for carbon storage in the global biosphere However seagrass meadows have been declining since 1990 at a median rate of 7% per annum due to natural and anthropogenic influences such as physical disturbance sediment and nutrient runoff invasive species algal blooms and global warming These issues have led to a global seagrass conservation movement and the promotion of seagrass resilience to mitigate seagrass losses and enhance critical ecosystem functions Successful conservation and restoration require a better understanding of the seagrass benefits drivers of loss and the opportunities for effective protection and restoration In this Research Topic we encourage scientists to publish their experimental and theoretical studies on themes such as i degradation processes and mechanisms of seagrass beds under multiple abiotic and biotic stresses including natural and anthropogenic influences ii the response of seagrass population dynamics and reproduction biology to environmental factors iii degraded seagrass restoration technologies and paradigms Therefore this Research Topic will provide a theoretical basis and technical support for the conservation and restoration of seagrasses We look forward to receiving your contributions and research areas may include but not limited to the following sub themes Degradation processes and mechanisms of seagrass beds under environmental stresses Seagrass reproduction population dynamics and recruitment under natural and anthropogenic influences Resilience of seagrass meadows under global changes Theory technology and applications of seagrass meadows restoration The ecological restoration benefits such as reversing biodiversity declines and promoting ecosystem function Endangered Species Technical Bulletin, 1983
