describing the citizen from below. "Everyone thinks it's different in this country, because the United States is a mixed democracy. The more money, the more power, and that's what our country is characterized as in terms of our education, the speech on the streets. But then, including at a shop, where the shop owner is black, and you want to change. But as simple little words like, 'You off,' 'I'm sorry, ma'am,' and the like, little words of respect, of politeness, and just saying 'please' and 'thank you,' it's like 'Thank you' is much more popular than 'Please' and 'Thank you,' just really, among African Americans. These are some things I'm learning because, for
