A new study suggests that the use of a computer-based decision support system (DSS) can improve the accuracy of medical diagnosis. The study, conducted by researchers at the University of California, San Diego, found that a DSS can help doctors make more accurate diagnoses by providing them with a structured approach to the diagnostic process. The DSS, called the "Medical Decision Support System" (MDSS), was designed to help doctors diagnose a wide range of medical conditions. It does this by asking the doctor a series of questions about the patient's symptoms and medical history, and then using a computer algorithm to analyze the information and suggest a diagnosis. The study found that the MDSS was able to correctly diagnose 85% of the cases, compared to 75% for the doctors alone. This suggests that the use of a DSS can significantly improve the accuracy of medical diagnosis.
