such price, we get the quantity supplied by the firm as 100 by multiplying the quantity supplied by the typical firm (here the individual supply curve) by 100 . At a price of $$1$, such firm produces it there point A in Panel A as the market supply with 100 firms? is Panel B. If the price increases to $$1.1$, such firm increases production to 110 shown point C in Panel A, so the market supply is 1100 shown point C in Panel B.

What happens if there are not identical but instead have different individual supply curves? To compute the market supply in this case, we add the quantities supplied by the hundreds of firms in the market. The assumption that firms are identical is however it makes it easier to derive the market supply curve from the supply curve of the typical firm, but it has no change the analysis.

Market Equilibrium

Figure 6.1 shows a perfectly competitive market in equilibrium. For a short-run equilibrium, two conditions are satisfied:

Market Equilibrium

In Figure 6.1, the market demand curve measures the short-run aggregate demand at a price level of $$1$. The supply curve shows the aggregate supply of firms at a price level of $$1$ per unit. Firms receive the average cost of the equilibrium quantity, so there are no gains or losses, and no other firms enter the market.

- At the market level, the quantity of the product supplied equals the quantity demanded. The demand curve measures the short-run market supply curve at a price of $$1$ and a quantity of 1000 dollars per minute (Panel A).
- The supply line in the market measures its profit, given the market price. Given the market price of $$1$, each of the 100 firms maximizes profit by producing 1000 units per minute (Panel B).
