Division of Budget Administration, Products & Priorities, The Social Context of Technology Leo Webley, Sophia Adams, Joanna Bruck, 2020-06-30 The Social Context of Technology explores non ferrous metalworking in Britain and Ireland during the Bronze and Iron Ages c 2500 BC to 1st century AD Bronze working dominates the evidence though the crafting of other non ferrous metals including gold silver tin and lead is also considered Metalwork has long played a central role in accounts of European later prehistory Metals were important for making functional tools and elaborate decorated objects that were symbols of prestige Metalwork could be treated in special or ritualised ways by being accumulated in large hoards or placed in rivers or bogs But who made these objects Prehistoric smiths have been portrayed by some as prosaic technicians and by others as mystical figures akin to magicians They have been seen both as independent travelling entrepreneurs and as the dependents of elite patrons Hitherto these competing models have not been tested through a comprehensive assessment of the archaeological evidence for metalworking This volume fills that gap with analysis focused on metalworking tools and waste such as crucibles moulds casting debris and smithing implements The find contexts of these objects are examined both to identify places where metalworking occurred and to investigate the cultural practices behind the deposition of metalworking debris The key questions are what was the social context of this craft and what was its ideological significance How did this vary regionally and change over time As well as elucidating a key aspect of later prehistoric life in Britain and Ireland this important examination by leading scholars contributes to broader debates on material culture and the social role of craft Primary Metals and Fabricated Metal Parts: Metalworking executive publication readership, 1958 Metalworking Made Easy William J. Petersen,2014-01-28 Although this book is for the home hobbyist or the advanced metalworker the purpose of this book which was originally written in 1929 was to present in ready form 1 a source of practice exercises for the teacher of metal work 2 work specifications for shop directions and outside preparation for the student All of the projects are interesting fun and very useful You can even sell many of them for a nice profit if that is your will The author s many years of experimentation and observation as toolmaker draftsman university student and teacher of art metal work and machine shop practice to high school and university students furnishes the background for the book The series of 101 metal projects each a separate unit with complete working drawings and directions is so arranged that the beginner starting with the first problem upon its completion will find that he can put this experience to practical use in the second problem and so on through all the jobs The sequence however need not be adhered to rigidly when omission seems to be advisable It is firmly believed that the methods of the projects and their sequence in the book are based upon principles that are pedagogically and practically sound Each project was put through the careful test of time and experience before being given a place in the series By analyzing a metal trade a list of the fundamental operations involved in it may be compiled This list can then be used as a guide in determining what should be taught in a shop course Accordingly a project is selected and designed with a definite objective in view for the student which when attained will smooth the way in the operations that are to follow The lessons given call for tools electrical contrivances and machine equipment that are useful and of intrinsic value This fact is of no small consideration to the student He will naturally study such a book with keen interest and come to the shop ready for work
