

Figure 4

4) In the simulation a packet size of 1512 bytes is used (Cisco: Each Ethernet packet can contain up to 1512 bytes of data). To study the effect of the packet size on the throughput of the created Ethernet network, create a duplicate of the Cisco_00029 scenario. Name the new scenario 'Cisco_Q4'. In the new scenario use a packet size of 512 bytes (for all nodes). For both Cisco_00029 and Cisco_Q4 scenarios, choose the following global statistic:

Solution:

A1: graph that compares the throughput in bytes/sec in cisco_00029 and cisco_q4 scenarios.

Figure 5 shows the traffic received speed. The network with smaller packets (maximum 512 bytes) has smaller speed at the beginning. However, with the time goes by, the speed maintains a certain value, which is bigger than the network (Cisco_00029) with larger packets. This is because of the difference of the packet number. With more packets to be sent, the time efficiency becomes worse. So the smaller network off network is higher. As the network load is rising, the network with more sending packets will be more efficient. It is because the smaller size packet will make the collision occurs less.
