Measuring Sustainability And Decoupling A Survey Of Methodology And Practice:

Measuring Sustainability and Decoupling Nordic Council of Ministers,2006 There is growing interest among policymakers for the prospects of decoupling economic growth from environmental degradation as they have a hard time disentangling environmental policies from their economic and social impacts Opportunities for improved environmental quality without compromising economic growth are and always will be welcomed Decoupling should not be thought of as an approximation of sustainability While decoupling indicators often give a reasonably good measure for potential or progress towards sustainability decoupling is neither a sufficient nor a necessary condition for sustainability Decoupling indicators unlike many other statistical efforts related to the environment are not meant to be all inclusive or to summarize the general state of the environment Their purpose is rather to measure countries progress towards mitigating or alleviating particular environmental pressures from the relevant driving forces Decoupling indicators are primarily attractive for their simplicity For detailed policy analysis in which sustainability is the objective other methods are needed

The Pig Sector Darryl Jones,Dimitris Diakosavvas,2003 This is the first in a series of OECD studies which investigate trade policies agricultural production and their impact on the environment This study focuses on the pig sector in OECD countries and considers the most appropriate forms of policy intervention It finds that production is expected to slow if not contract in OECD European and Asian countries where government support for pig production in the form of tariffs and export subsidies is generally the highest and environmental impacts on water and air pollution are of greatest concern Therefore liberalising trade is likely to generate some environmental benefits Using comparative analysis it also concludes that while manure management regulations do differ among countries the cost effect on pig producers is not significant in explaining differences in international competitiveness Industry and Environment
