People See on Social Media Paul Hitlin, Kenneth Olmstead, 2018 Millions of people see science related information on their Facebook feeds or elsewhere on social media but the kinds of science stories people most likely encounter are often practical tips with news you can use or promotions for programs and events rather than new developments in the science engineering and technology world In an effort to better understand the science information that social media users encounter on these platforms Pew Research Center systematically analyzed six months worth of posts from 30 of the most followed science related pages on Facebook

Facebook Use and Public Participation in Science : a Comparison Between the General Public and Users of a Science Facebook Fan Page Cheng Ying Wu, 2017

Facebook's Emotional Contagion Experiment as a Challenge to Research Ethics, 2016 Abstract This article analyzes the ethical discussion focusing on the Facebook emotional contagion experiment published by the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences in 2014 The massive scale experiment manipulated the News Feeds of a large amount of Facebook users and was successful in proving that emotional contagion happens also in online environments However the experiment caused ethical concerns within and outside academia mainly for two intertwined reasons the first revolving around the idea of research as manipulation and the second focusing on the problematic definition of informed consent The article concurs with recent research that the era of social media and big data research are posing a significant challenge to research ethics the practice and views of which are grounded in the pre social media era and reflect the classical ethical stances of utilitarianism and deontology
