

Nokia Siemens Networks Flexi Multiradio Antenna System

Nokia Siemens Networks has pioneered work on Active Antenna Systems and has publicly demonstrated working examples of the technology since it was introduced in 2008.

Similar in size to conventional passive antennas, the Nokia Siemens Networks Flexi Multiradio Antenna System is a true active antenna system that integrates the base station's radio frequency elements into the antenna. This is achieved by using 8 x 10 W power amplifiers to feed the passive antenna elements. Not only does this bring huge cost and performance benefits, but it also paves the way for features such as fully adjustable electrical tilt per carrier or iRAT and beamforming.

Flexi Multiradio Antenna Systems increases site capacity and coverage with advanced features like vertical beamforming, 2 x 2 Multiple-Input Multiple-Output (MIMO) and independent Tx and Rx electrical tilting per frequency or RAT. Vertical beamforming provides up to 85% capacity gain and up to 30% coverage gain compared to a standard 3-sector feedless site. Furthermore, when used with industry-leading Nokia Siemens Networks SON functions, the customer experience and service quality will be raised to completely new levels. Future active antenna developments are expected to support multiple columns and horizontal beamforming, to further enhance the capacity.

High reliability and smart redundancy is achieved with hot-swap capable radio units and with SON functionalities such as self-healing.

The first products in the Flexi Multiradio Antenna System range are based on a single-column, cross-polarized antenna. With intelligent vertical beamforming, an antenna can be used to create two cells in the same sector, allowing 4-way receiver diversity in uplink to improve end-user performance. Traditionally this requires a two-column, cross-polarized antenna and four receivers.

Flexi Multiradio Antenna System is designed to help operators to reduce the cost of evolving their networks by creating an active antenna system that can be integrated with an existing site solution. Seamless integration drives down costs and speeds up rollout.

Nokia Siemens Networks Flexi Multiradio Antenna System comprises the following components:

- Power-amplifier for each radiator element inside the antenna
- Optimized design with 8 transmitters/receivers with 0.5-10W power amplifiers
- High output power, up to 2 x 40W for macro deployments
- Flexible power configuration per carrier (1 carrier at 30W, 2 carriers at 40W, etc)
- High cell and carrier density, for example up to 4+4 WCDMA cells in one sector
- Integrated 2 x 2 MIMO
- 4-way Rx diversity
